

Who Matters Most

Although it is extremely easy to think of how awful quarantining for months was, quarantine can definitely be seen as a period of growth. Because of the inability to hang out with my friends and extended family, quarantine showed me which of my friends truly care about me. My close friends and I were limited to seeing each other mostly in outdoor settings, but we continuously checked in on one another throughout quarantine and I am so appreciative to have people in my life that really care about me. Although a lot of the time I was frustrated being quarantined, the memories I made with my close friends are memories I will have for a lifetime. Without that period of rest and being at home, I would not have been I would not have been able to sit around and play cards all night long or take numerous walks on the beach. Specific memories I made in quarantine are memories that I am going to cherish for the rest of my life. Looking back now, I think that quarantine was a much needed break from the high pressures of society and school. I never thought I would get a point of appreciating quarantine, however I truly believe that quarantine not only helped improve my attitude about life but also showed me who my real friends are and how to be a much better friend.
